She said she was a retired federal employee who worked in contract administration, later worked as a bail-bond person, and has her own company devoted to diversity training. She said she was here to build a bridge because someone told Mr. Sokolovic that she called him a racist. She said she was here to apologize in person, however, what she was claimed to have said is simply not true. She said her reputation means a lot to her. She added she was not trying to get a contract but trying to come before the board to explain that she could provide diversity training if needed.

Dr. Herron K. Gaston, a pastor at United Methodist Church in Bridgeport, said diversity and inclusion was critical. He said Rev. Carolyn Nah was a part of his congregation. He said he could attest that she did not hold discriminatory views, and she cared deeply about the city of Bridgeport and its students. He said he wanted to be a character reference for Ms. Nah, who has been at the helm of leadership of the NAACP.

Ms. Allen arrived at the meeting.

Marge Hiller, a representative of the Central High School Governance Council, said the group is revitalizing the scholarship fund at the school. She said the goal is to raise $20,000 to replenish the amount of money in the fund, with at least two-thirds of that amount given out this spring. She asked the board members to distribute her flyer and make a contribution.

There will be a ceremony on June 5th at the Waterview in Monroe. He said this was an impressive and proud honor to be awarded.

Mr. Benejan said he was not happy with a situation when he shows up at an event and people get nervous because he is a board member. He said he does not want that because he is just there as a parent. He said he wanted staff to understand if he is at a school, he is not there to tell anybody what to do. He said we are here to help the staff and students to work like a team.

NEW BUSINESS:

The next item was on the district's Debate League field trip to the Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the U.S. Senate in Boston, M.A.

Ron Rapice said the trip was planned a few years back before Covid. The students will take part in a Senate module and participate as a senator from either party and a selected state. The trip will include a visit to the JFK Library.

In response to a question, Mr. Rapice said he provided the executed permission slips and student information log to the superintendent's office. Ms. Baptiste-Perez said there was one permission slip in her packet that was not signed by a parent or guardian. Mr. Rapice was provided with the name of the student.

The goal is to increase diversity and address the teacher shortage in the United States. She said there are 41 students participating, with an additional 26 students on a wait list.

Ms. Reid said the trip will take place on May 26th, which will include a brunch and a celebration of teachers. Presenters will include Rep. Claiborne and Allen Houston, the former New York Knicks player.

Supt. Testani said a teacher residency program was created two years ago with Sacred Heart University. He said the partnership being developed with TSTT is the missing link that will enhance the residency program and result in recruiting teachers to the district.
